Drew Pack is a regional outreach manager for the Pittsburgh Branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland. From the Bank's Pittsburgh Branch, he works with the community development team on current and emerging economic and community development issues across the Fourth Federal Reserve District. Mr. Pack joined the Federal Reserve System in 2009 at the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, for which he worked as a regional public policy specialist in the Public Affairs Department before moving to the community development team. In that role, he provided advisory services and research on workforce development at the St. Louis Fed's Memphis Branch.

Prior to joining the Federal Reserve, Mr. Pack worked in an economic development role with the Pensacola Bay Area Chamber of Commerce in Florida. He also assisted in the establishment of iTenWired, a regional entrepreneurship network, and the Gulf Coast Center for Innovation and Entrepreneurship, a business incubator.

Mr. Pack holds a BA in political science from the University of Mississippi and an MPA from Auburn University.
